Some quick things for headlines:

1. Try to keep the headline not too long - less than 8-10 words I think, this should be something that can appear on Google easily.

2. In general, focus on things that add value / give opportunities and try to avoid things that are kind of abstract/giving an opinion “Why You Shouldn't Overlook Boutique Consulting Firms (And How to Land an Offer)” → like no one cares about this. Instead, you could reframe this as “5 Boutique Consulting Firm Opportunities” or “10 Boutique Consulting Firms to Apply To” or “Ultimate Guide To Get Into Boutique Consulting” → each of these show either A) A set of opportunities or B) give you an approach to get it.

3. Avoid titles that are trying to be like college essays or research papers “Beyond the Case: How to Master Consulting Fit Interview Questions” → get rid of beyond the case. Instead directly give the value in the page. “How to Master Consulting Fit Interview Questions: 10 Tips” or just “How to Master Consulting Fit Interview Questions”

“How to Beat the McKinsey Solve Ecosystem: A Step-by-Step Prep Guide” → this one for example is pretty good. But maybe just make it “How to Beat Mckinsey Solve: A step-by-step guide” to be a little shorter.

“Conquering the Bain Pymetrics Test: Tips for the Behavioral Assessment Game” → change this to “Ultimate Guide to the Bain Pymetrics Test” → just more clean and clear what you're getting from it and why someone should read it.
